MAN AND PANTHER.

Fearful Struggle in Which Only Nature's Weapons Were Used.

Probably the only man who ever killed a panther with no other weapon than the strong hands and brawny arms nature gave him is a resident of Memphis, says the Commercial-Appel.

He is an Australian native, born in Sydney, and gives his name as John L. Sullivan. He stands six feet five inches in his shoes and weighs 215 pounds, not an ounce of which is surplus flesh. His colossal frame is one solid mass of bone, sinew and muscle, and if fighting were his trade he would be ready to go into the ring at a moment's notice. Had he been reared a pugilist he would have cut no mean figure in the history of the ring, and in all probability have proved a match for Peter Jackson in his palmist days.

But this modern giant says he never fought a man in all his life. The only fight of note he ever had was with a panther, and that laid him up for a year. He will remember that fight to his dying day.

It occurred nine years ago. Sullivan was then fireman of a construction train on the Louisville, New Orleans & Texas railroad. One day his engine stopped in the woods, near Shelby, in Bolivar county, Miss., and having an hour's leisure he got off, intending to snatch an hour's rest on a pile of cane near the right of way. Just as he was preparing to lie down he saw a panther approaching through a ravine that concealed him from the construction crew. Sullivan gave the alarm and the crew fled, leaving him alone on the field. The panther turned on Sullivan, whose presence it was ignorant of until it heard his warning cry.

The animal, which proved to be of formidable size, made a spring and landed on Sullivan with an impact that would have felled an ordinary man. The Australian stood the shock without a stagger, however, and pushed the beast off with a powerful shove, but not before its terrible claws had buried themselves in his flesh and torn off the skin and tissue from the neck to the waist. Then with a blood-curdling snarl it attacked his legs, clawing off a section of his thigh and biting through the calf, where its teeth remained until Sullivan, with a powerful effort, "kicked loose," as he himself described it.

Then the battle began in earnest. The animal, now roused to fury, reared himself on his hind legs and came on with a rush. Sullivan caught him by both forefeet and held them in a grip like iron. A furious battle followed. It was a hand-to-hand fight between man and beast on equal terms and with life as the stake. Sullivan tried to throw the beast, but the ground was slippery with his own blood and prevented a firm foothold. At last, inch by inch, he forced the animal toward the root of a big tree and with a mighty effort threw it down and fell on top of its prostrate body, never releasing his hold of those mighty forearms.

Then came a struggle that Sullivan long remembered with a shiver. He knew his only chance lay in keeping his clutch on the brute's forearms, extending them as wide as he could force them. After a brief breathing spell he crawled up the brute's body and planted one of his knees firmly on its chest. All this time the panther was using his hind legs to great advantage, tearing chunks of flesh from Sullivan's feet. But he never thought of it. He had other work before him. How to kill the beast was the question that puzzled him as he knelt there, panting, half-fainting with loss of blood, his nerves almost overcome with the fetid odor of the brute's carcass, inhaling its hot breath and almost feeling the fire of its eyes.

At last he thought of a way, and nerving himself to the task he dug his knee deep down into the animal's chest, summoning all his strength to the effort, and feeling its bones crunching under him. Then using the spot on which the knee rested as a fulcrum he drew the animal's head toward himself to break its neck. The animal divined his motive and resisted with all its strength, but the man prevailed and the neck broke with a snap that might have been heard a block.

When the conductor and engineer came along half an hour afterward they found Sullivan lying unconscious in a pool of his own blood, almost in the arms of the beast he had slain.

Mortality Among French Soldiers.

Messrs. Burot and Lagrand, two eminent French naval surgeons, have for a long time given close attention to the mortality among French colonial troops. They estimate this from 1891-5 inclusive at 42.95 per 1,000. During the same period the mortality in the Paris garrison was six in the 1,000 and 11 in the 1,000 in the fleet.

THE WIDOW'S MIGHT.

Vicar Goes to Inquire Into Her Questionable Antecedents.

So many hints had come to the vicar that he began to think at last that there must be something questionable in the past of the handsome widow who had lately been such a fervid worshiper at his church. Yet to each suggestion he had flung off his ancient chestnut about the sinner that repenteth, and he trusted to it to carry him through to the end.

But it was the bazaar that did it. The society ladies who frequented the front pews made no open objection to the newcomer sitting in the back ones, but when she boldly turned up at the meeting and offered to take the flower stall, something happened which Baxter afterward described as a short catatonic. Baxter is the Sunday school superintendent; he reads decadent literature and considers himself smart.

And there was an indignation meeting, and a deputation out of which another deputation was formed consisting of the vicar and one of the trustees. This smaller deputation made its way toward the neat little villa where the widow resided.

"I say, old man," said the trustee. (As a trustee he was privileged to call the vicar "old man.") "I think you'd better go inside yourself. It's too rough, the two of us, you know."

"As you please, brother, though I would fain have a companion in this most distressing duty," responded the vicar.

"No, I'll do no good. You can see it through better; I'll wait here." And the trustee clinched the matter by biting off the end of his cigar and striking a match on a tree guard.

When he shifted his weight from his right foot to his left the trustee consulted his watch and found that the vicar had been absent just a quarter of an hour. When he returned to the right foot again he saw that 25 minutes had elapsed. His third cigar was commenced just three-quarters of an hour after the deputation divided, and it was half an hour after that that the trustee began to make remarks of a kind foreign to his usual character.

His eyes were closing as the click of the widow's gate brought him to his senses. "I trust your information is of a promising nature, brother?" he said to the approaching vicar.

"More than promising," replied the black-coated one.

"And are you satisfied she is of unquestionable antecedents?"

"More than satisfied."

"Then, brother," observed the trustee, "put your tie straight and plaster down your hair a bit and we'll go home." —San Francisco Examiner.

THE MEANEST MAN.

An Undertaker Tells of One Who Ranks High in the Order.

"Talking about the meanest man alive," reflected the undertaker, as he drove a few more nails and covered up the holes with putty, "I know him."

"I've seen a good many men who wouldn't pay for the coffin in which their relatives were buried, but this fellow was a peach. He was the worst that ever happened."

"You see, he came to me one day with a two-by-eight smile for a greeting, and invited me to take one."

"Bill Jones is dead," he began, as he stirred his sugar and water.

"You don't say," I replied.

"Yes, he died last night," resumed the other. "I've come in for his coffin."

"I sold him the coffin, and he said Bill Jones' son would settle for it the next time he came to town. The family was prostrated with grief, and that's the reason he didn't bother about the money—a $50 one, too."

"I knew old Bill Jones, and knew his son, and, of course, I wasn't going to deny the poor fellow a box to be buried in. So I sent it on, and had a mighty sad piece put in the paper about it. It told how good Bill was, and about his first, second and third wife, and all about him. Two days after that here came Bill, snorting like a locomotive."

"I'm not dead," he shouted.

"The dickens you ain't!" I yelled back just as loud. "I furnished a coffin to bury you, anyhow, you ungrateful rascal!"

"He'd already been to the newspaper office and found out who gave 'em the item."

"But it was the man who got the coffin that was the meanest man on earth. He had got to bury his own wife in, and as she was all he had to start with, he had sold out and left the country before I could have him arrested." —Paducah Sun.

A foul breath is one of the greatest afflictions that a man or woman can have. An affliction not only to themselves, but to those whom they come in contact. A foul breath is a great discourager of affection. It would probably be more so if people only realized just what bad breath means. Bad breath is one of the symptoms of constipation. Some of the other symptoms are sour stomach, loss of appetite, sick and bilious headache, dizziness, heartburn and distress after eating. These things mean indigestion. They lead to dyspepsia and worse things. They all start with constipation, and constipation is inexcusable because it can be cured—easily, quickly and permanently, by the use of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. They give to nature just the little help that she needs. There is no case of biliousness, constipation, indigestion, "heartburn," or any of the night-mare breeding brood, that these little "Pellets" will not cure.

Send 21 cents in one-cent stamps to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y., and receive Dr. Pierce's 1008 page Common Sense Medical Adviser illustrated.
